Beautiful from the Beginning

When Cedar Grove Cemetery was organized in 1867, it was only three years since the end of the Civil War, and Dorchester was still an independent town. The land granted for burials was in the southernmost area of the town, bordering on the Neponset River and downstream from the Milton / Dorchester lower falls. The land was blanketed with cedar trees and rose gently over a puddingstone ledge. The area was home to a variety of bird life and small animals, remote in a rural setting.

Today, the cemetery continues to preserve its identity as a serene and bucolic patch of nature; a place of quiet contemplation. Now having passed its 150th year, the cemetery's trustees have begun an extensive tree planting program to ensure the natural beauty and to protect the unique ecology for generations to come.
